

YEAR-END FAVOURITES

Photo by Andrej Ivanov

A lighter moment

Lisa and James Barber tickle J.J. while they wait for ultrasound results in the examination room at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario in Ottawa, Ont. on Nov. 14, 2018. This was one of the first moments of respite that the family had, after a long day of running around. From blood work to different scans, the family had not stopped since 8 a.m. that freezing cold early-winter morning. In the ultrasound exam room, the last of a battery of tests was conducted that day.

(Editor's Note) - This year's first- and second-year photojournalism students have been working hard to capture images at the college, in the community and across the country. Whether it's a tragic fire or a poignant moment, our students have been taking photos to tell their stories. We asked first and second-year students to submit some of their favourite photos from their time at Loyalist. These are just a few samples of the work they have been doing.

Photo by Andrej Ivanov

Napanee Fire Emergency Services prepare to put out a car fire on Hwy. 401 near Napanee, Ont. Fire Services got a call around 8 p.m. that a car was on fire. There were no injuries, said Fire Prevention Officer Kevin Duncan. Aside from the usual rubber necking, the incident did not cause any further traffic issues. The cause of the car fire was not determined. "Car fires are almost impossible to determine because they burn so fast," said Duncan. He added that they were at a good location to respond to the fire quickly, as the fire occurred between two exits. "There are lots of car fires on the 401," he said.

A resident of Tent City at an undisclosed location in Kitchener, Ont. injects alleged hydromorphone into his jugular. The man is aided by another resident, who holds up a tiny broken vanity mirror, as well as a torch light. Tent City was created to protest the lack of affordable housing and safe injection sites in Kitchener, in the Waterloo Region and worldwide.

Photo by Andrej Ivanov

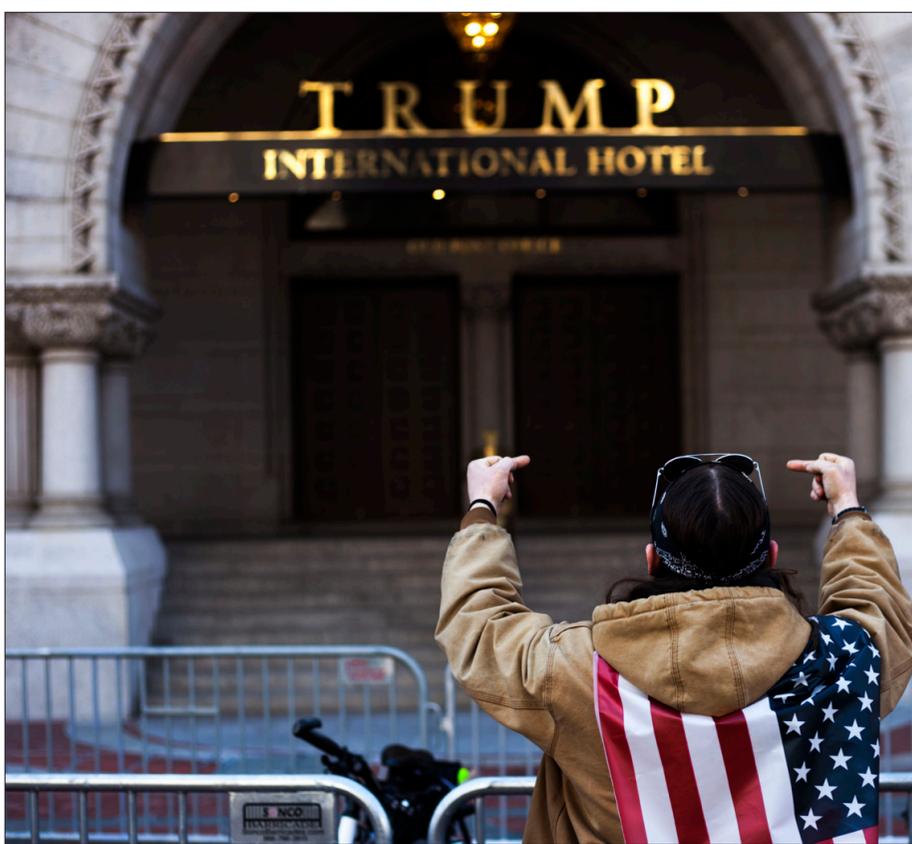

Firefighters from three local fire departments work to put out a house fire at 1038 Salem Rd. just southwest of Ivanhoe. The residence were not at home, however, two pet dogs perished in the flames.

Photo by Sasha Seftor

An estimated 800,000 people took part in the March for Our Lives event in Washington, D.C. The event, an attempt to raise awareness on and prevent future gun violence in schools, was organized by students in the wake of a deadly high school shooting in Florida.

Photo by Sasha Seffter

A demonstrator flashed the middle finger at the Trump Tower during the March For Our Lives protest in Washington D.C. An estimated 800,000 people showed up to rally for gun reform.

Photo by Matthew Botha

(Above) Trans Queen's University student "J" holds a sign reflecting her support of Jordan Peterson's right to free speech at a protest organized by students and faculty who contested Peterson's appearance at Grant Hall on the Queen's campus.

Photo by Frank Moses

(Left) A student holds a sign while chanting 'Doug Ford has got to go!' during rally to protest the new cuts to both OSAP, and tuition across Ontario.

Photo by Matthew Botha

Mark Leonard has volunteered at Global Pet Foods every Sunday for the last three years through Fixed Fur Life. Fixed Fur Life is a non-profit organization that is dedicated to sterilizing and not euthanizing animals since 2004. They work with many adoption centres in the Quinte area.

By Jessie Munro

(Above) Little Ray's Reptile Zoo brought its showcase of animals to Travelodge in Belleville. Staff member Sarah places a small lizard on her hand for people to get a better look at it.

Photo by Debbie MacNevin

(Right) Two young folks dance in the centre square of Coxcatlán, Mexico. In the small community, eight hours north of Mexico City, there are events in the evenings. The small community has some problems with migration to the major cities. The area is in the mountains.

Photo by Andrej Ivanov

(Right) Paul Renaud Jr. and his son Theo enjoy the 23rd annual Model Railroad Show at Centennial Secondary School in Belleville.

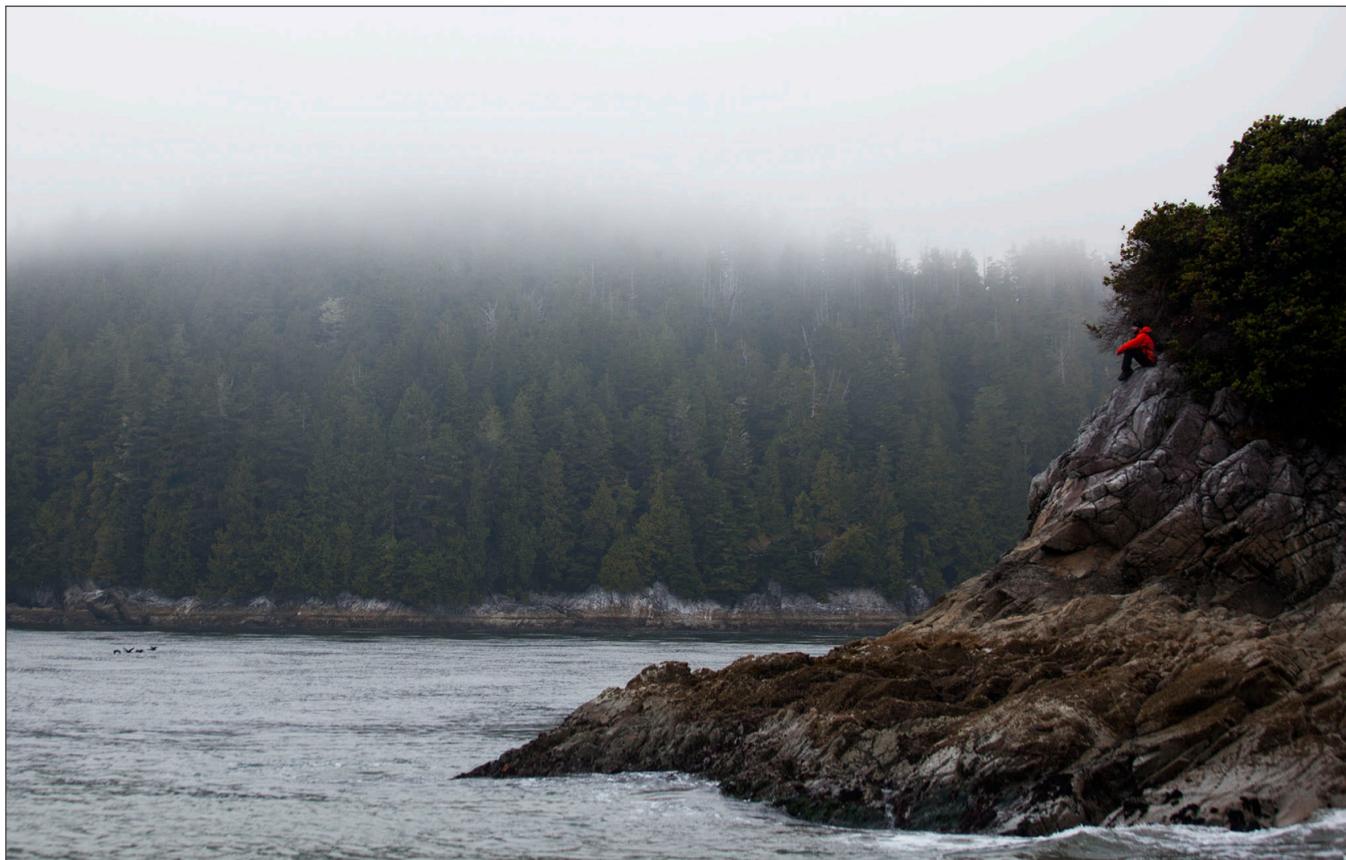

Photo by Jessie Munro

(Below) Members of the Quinte Ballet School's professional training program execute a synchronized entrechat during the annual spring showcase performance in Belleville.

Photo by Sasha Seftor

Antoine St-Onge Cloutier looks out over the ocean from the shorelines of Tofino, B.C. Cloutier works as a resort manager in Jasper for six months of the year, earning enough to spend the rest of his time travelling.
Photo by Matthew Botha

After a big snow storm in Belleville this past winter, a youngster enjoying sliding at Riverside Park.
Photo by Gagendee Sarangal

A group of youngsters battle it out during a friendly doughnut eating contest at the 9th annual Merland Park shirtless ice fishing derby.
Photo by Sasha Sefer

Pedestrians walk through street near Toronto City Hall.
Photo by TaeHyeong Kim

A child enjoys the simple pleasure of a bubble shower provided by a local busker in the courtyard of El Duomo (the Dome) in the ancient city of Florence, Italy.
Photo by Frank Moses

Josh Roberts, a Loyalist College varsity athlete and student taking the public relations post-grad program, collects basketball shoes. He has more than 35 shoes in his collection and 10 he bought this year alone.

Photo by Caleb Seguin

(Above) Queen's University student Evan Walter picked up a flare during St. Patrick's Day celebrations off campus in Kingston. The flare was launched into the crowd, causing disarray.

Photo by Damon MacLean

(Right) Dave Henderson mentally prepares himself to hit the stage for a performance in Rumors, directed by Maija Thompson at the Pinnacle Playhouse.

Photo by Caleb Seguin

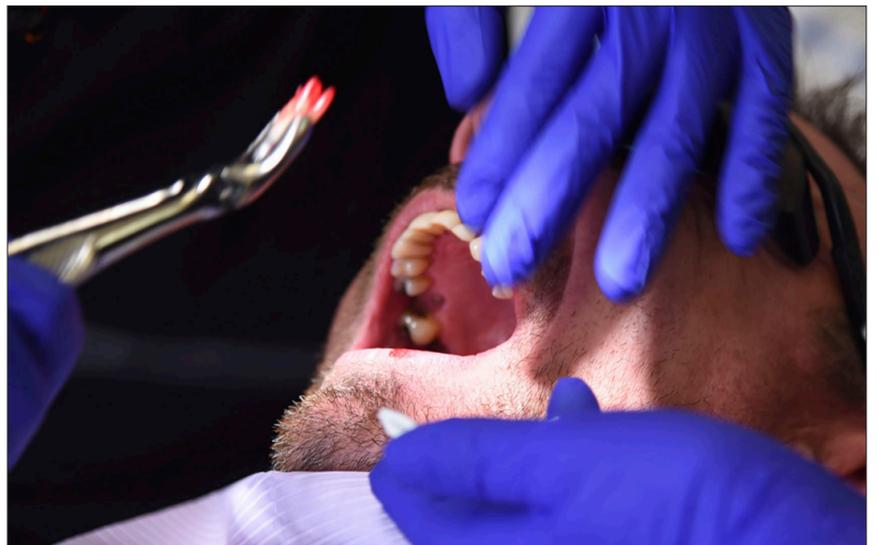

Heather Barker takes a bow after the preview performance of Rumors.

Photo by Caleb Seguin

Master Kenzo Dozono demonstrates a move during Karate class at S.K.J. Belleville Karate School. He is a member of Karate Ontario and the National Karate Association of Canada.

Photo by Gagandeep Sarangal

(Above) Mikey came running when he happened to hear about free dental work on the radio. After pulling out his aching molar two or three months ago, he managed to get out of the pain.

Photo by Brian Choi

(Left) Jacinta Obasohan, a second-year customs border services student, was elected by Loyalist students to serve on the Board of Governors.

Photo by Brian Choi

Ben sits inside his makeshift home in Poole's Land, Tofino, B.C. He lives there with his dog Hozer. With high rent prices in the town of Tofino, some people have chosen to live in less conventional places in order to stay on the island. At $10 a day, Poole's Land, a self-proclaimed 'eco village,' has become a home for budget travellers and hippies from around the world.

Photo by Matthew Botha

Bonnie Bryan sits at a bus stop in Toronto, finally taking a break after her first long walk since being out of the hospital in spring of 2016. After the death of her husband back in 2015, Bryan has struggled with being in and out of the hospital. Bryan spent a whole year in and out of the hospital with different medical conditions.
 Photo by Debbie MacNevin

Jet and his guide dog Whiskey rest on the couch at home in Belleville. Whiskey helps Jet at home.
 Photo by TaeHyeong Kim

(Above) Mackayla Bryan stands in the doorway of her old-fashioned farmhouse as she watches a storm roll in. In July, when the storm happened, Bryan went out to watch it. Although scared, she braced it with courage and enjoyed it.
 Photo by Debbie MacNevin

(Right) Guiseppe Marconi implores his wife to answer the door as he holds a bouquet of flowers intended as a peace offering in Florence.
 Photo by Frank Moses

Davin Daji is a shoe cobbler at Your Shoe Store & Repairs. He has been running this family owned business for the past 10 years.
 Photo by Caleb Seguin

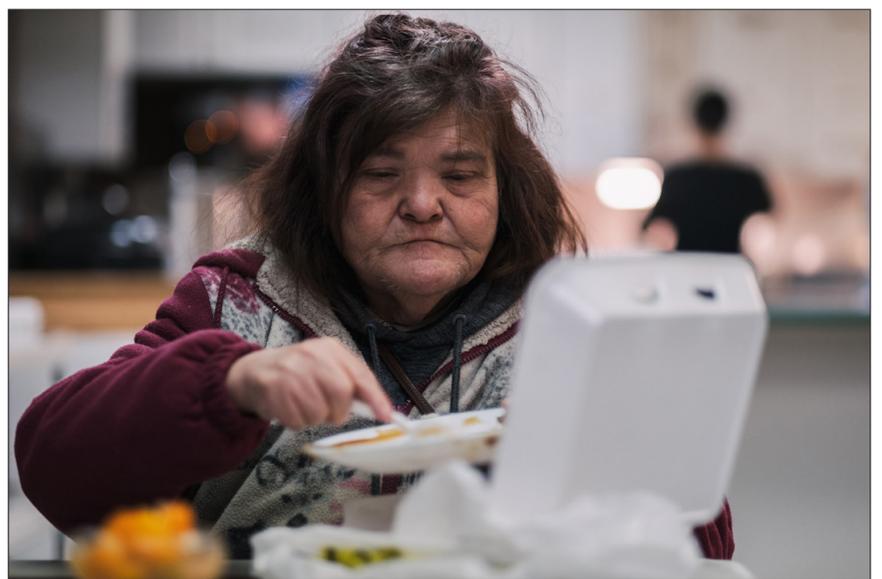

Adam's afternoon at A-School begins. The school is a special program designed to accommodate Adam's non-verbal autism as well as encourage the development of his own ways of communication, which he does largely through his art. Most importantly, the program aims to teach him learning methods and strategies so that he will be equipped with the necessary skills to transition into the YMCA Academy, a mainstream school and eventually, possibly, university. The A-school itself is no more than a small, cozy apartment on Spadina Road. The walls are covered in various pieces of art Adam created as well as different schedules and reminders that help keep him organized. On Fridays, Adam spends the class reflecting on the week, talking about the highlights and what he found difficult or easy.

Photo by Sam Brown

Ontario-born Paul Laroche, 41, seen here giving some change to recently homeless and self-confessed drug addicts Jen Murphy and Brian Orthard, is no stranger to the lack of mental health understanding, and he can sometimes be confrontational to those in authority. A self-assessed "mercurial" with occasionally erratic behaviour, he also finds surprising counter-balance, consoled by an inner-friend in the form of a Scottish, split-personality named Angus, who he openly admits to, but adds is more-like an anger management technique he has learned. Angus, he says in an appropriated accent, is often the only one capable of talking him down and off the edge. Despite the sometimes inhospitable nature of people, Laroche also recognizes human empathy when he sees it, always expressing gratitude and offering whatever he can find to reciprocate outpourings of such kindness, in kind.

Photo by Jonathan Matthie

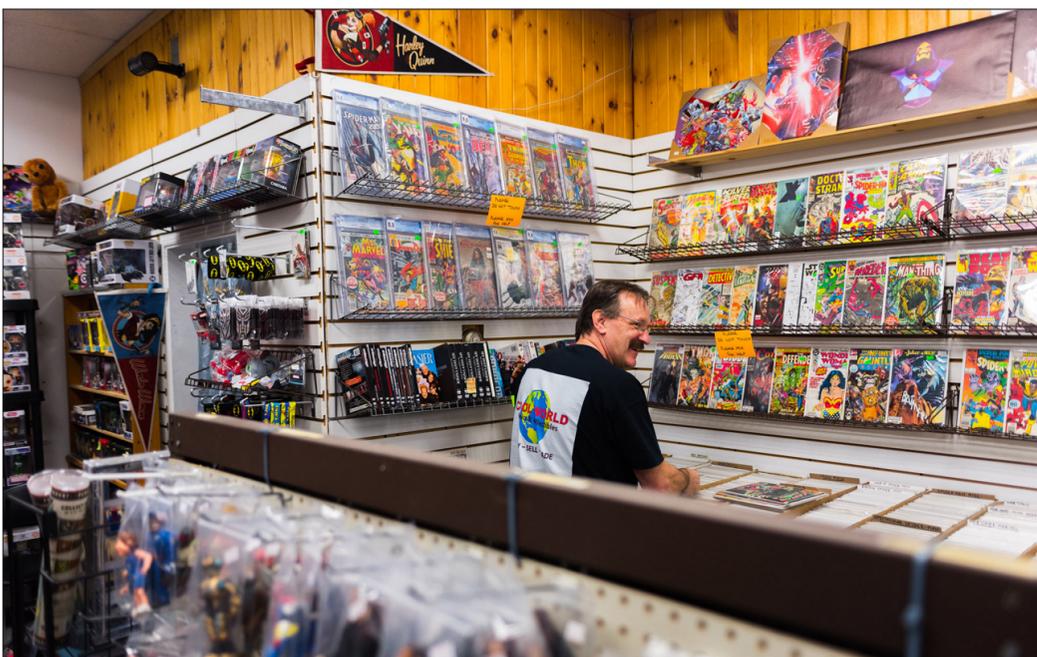

(Above, left) Danny a.k.a. "Mad Dog," a homeless man, eats a meal at the Salvation Army Warm Room. Danny has provided a mobile number, but as far as anyone knows in the photo-journalism department, he's always refused to give out his full 'real' name or e-mail address. He asks instead, for people who take pictures of him to e-mail them to his daughter who, after connecting with her, turns out to be a call girl in Toronto named Christina Louise Annesley. He says it's really just an annoying thing he does just to let her know he's still alive and kicking. Mad Dog is also a bicycle enthusiast, and his vehicle of choice is always visible to onlookers as a result of the pipe cleaners he colourfully wraps around the wheel spokes.

Photo by Jonathan Matthie

(Above, right) An elderly woman moves food from her plate into a 'to-go' container at the Salvation Army Warm Room.

Photo by Jonathan Matthie

(Left) Steve Campbell is 65, but has a heart of a young kid. He is one of the three owners of Cool World, a hobby shop that sells old comics, DVDs, records, toys and other hobby collectables. Campbell runs the comic section of the store and has collected over 100,000 comics since he turned 16. Some of his most valuable collectables include the first appearances of Marvel Comics characters Venom and Deadpool, with a price just under $1,000 combined. Campbell credits the recent surge of superhero movies for revitalizing the comic book world. "Old, unknown character comic books shoot up 20 to 30 times in value after their movies come out and make them popular," says Campbell with a smile.

Photo by Matthew Syriac Elias

(Above) Sultan Al Sultan talks with his friend Nathan at Loyalist College. He is Iraqi and came to the Canada in December 2016.

(Left) Terry Sprague, a naturalist and columnist, relaxes on a chesterfield at his home in Demorestville.

Photos by TaeHyeong Kim

Rod MacIvor is a retired photojournalist who worked for United Press International and the Ottawa Citizen. MacIvor is famous for being the photographer of the Trudeau family for UPI during Pierre Trudeau's reign as prime minister of Canada. During this time, MacIvor collected a large number of photos of the family, including his most famous photograph named "Trudeau carrying Justin under his arm," which he has on the back of his business card.

Photo by Kyle Visser

Barry Birkett's Canadian Pacific locomotive train model has all the bells and whistles, including a rechargeable battery pack and even a receiver for remote controller connectivity. He bought this one brand new, and 'weathered' it himself. He notes that by the time you install the couplers, batteries and receiver, it can easily cost upwards of $800 per locomotive.

Photo by Jonathan Matthie

Name

(Above) Al Hennessey and Hunter, his red fox lab, are the best of friends. "He's like my right arm," Hennessey said. "He's more than just a pet. He's part of the family really."

Photo by Desirée Decoste

(Right) Andy Sparling plays trombone during the Remembrance Day ceremony hosted in the Alumni Hall at Loyalist College.

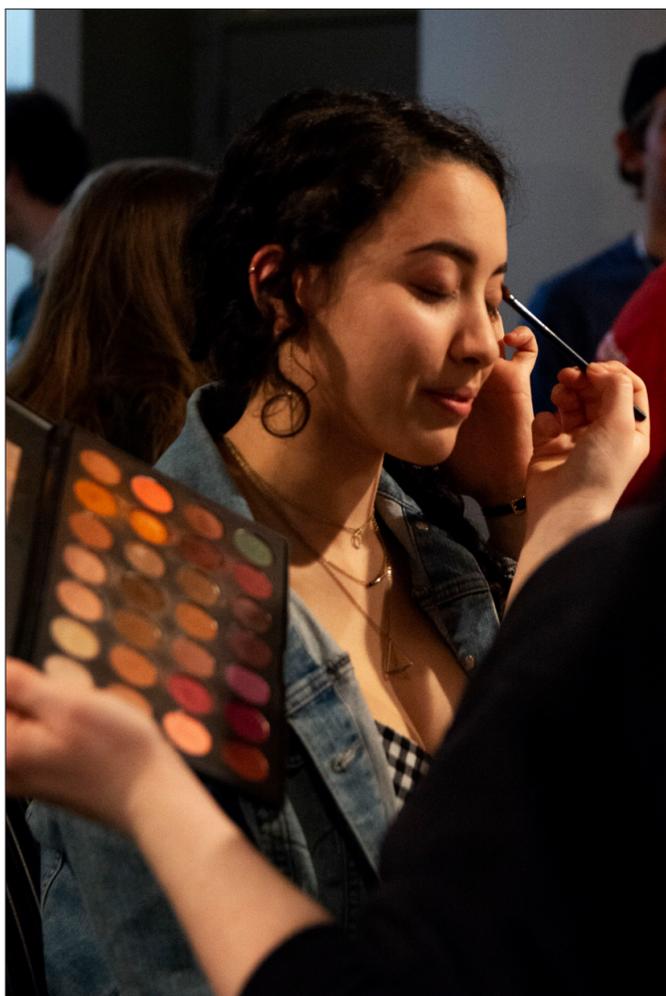

Photo by Damon MacLean

Photo by Matthew Syriac Elias

Anjana Menon performs "Vaarana Mohanae," a dance composition praising the Hindu God Ganesha, the remover of all the obstacles who blesses all his devotees. Menon is a member of AmudhaSri Dance School dance troupe, based out of Shrewsbury, Massachusetts. Run by Kalaimangai Anbalagan, the school specializes in Bharatanatyam dance form.

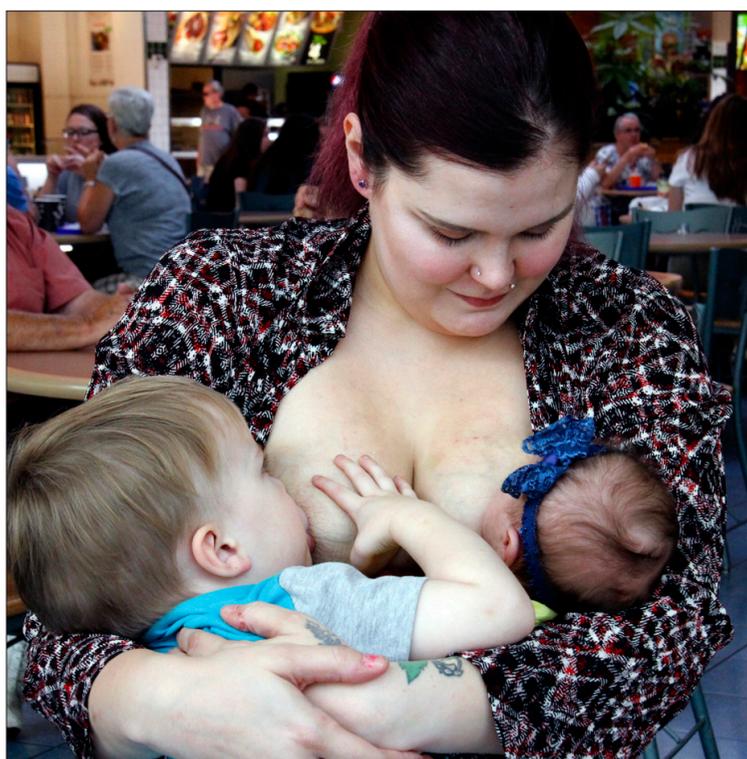

Rawan Youssef, a third-year film and television production student, casting director and an actor, gets makeup applied before filming.

Photo by Jessie Munro

(From left) Emily Desrosiers and Mandy Vilneff pose together in a photo that expresses self-confidence and self-love. Both girls have faced issues with insecurity in some form or another.

Photo by Debbie MacNevin

(Above) Amber Decoste cuddles her one and only rooster on her sustainable living/hobby farm. Even though she slaughters all her own animals, she shows them unconditional love until there last day.

Photo by Desirée Decoste

Left) Natacha Boulanger-Vinette feeds her son and daughter, Jude Vinette, 2, and five-week-old Luna Vinette, at the Quinte Mall. "I believe no one should be ashamed in public because a baby's hunger is much more important than other people's opinions."

Photo by Desirée Decoste

Belleville Mayor Mitch Panciuk and Sikh students chatted after the students helped Panciuk experience turban wrapping.

Photo by Mari Hiramoto

(Above) Akashdeep Kaur and Sukhjeet Kaur are shown in their bedroom.

Photo by Mari Hiramoto

(Left) A Sikh religious event took place at Loyalist College. Balwinder Singh Randhawa carries the Holy Book called Sri Guru Granth Sahib on his head while others follow his lead.

Photo by Gagandeep Sarangal

Abdullah, born Jordan Seifert, prays at the House of the Commandments-Masjid UL Islam in Trenton. Abdullah is a recent convert to Islam, who after years spent studying Abrahamic religions, was attracted by the spirituality, teachings and sense of community he finds in the Muslim faith.

Photo by Frank Moses

Rachel Streekstra cheers after scoring a point during the last volleyball home game of the season for Loyalist Lancers women's volleyball team. The Lancers beat the Georgian Grizzlies 3-1.

By Jessie Munro

The Loyalist Lancers women's volleyball team played one of their best sets of the year in the first game and took a 25-20 win to hold to an early lead. With tough serves and smart attacking, the home team defended their court well and didn't allow the Algonquin Thunder to go on multi-point runs. The Lancers went on to lose 3-1 to the Thunder.

Photo by Brian Choi

(Below) Rachel Cole of the Loyalist Lancers women's soccer team prepares to take a free kick against the St. Lawrence Vikings. The Lancers lost 2-0.

Photo by Matthew Syriac Elias

(Right) Loyalist Lancers players Rachelle Malette and Kierstyn Bennett celebrate after placing third in the OCAA Women's 7's rugby tournament in Peterborough.

Photo by Sasha Sefter

(Above) Isaac Hollinger was at Batawa Ski Hill for a recent event. Hollinger fell at the bottom of the hill and his friends decided he needed a snow bath.

Photo by Desirée Decoste

The Belleville Curling Club was founded in 1958 and about 300 members are active today. Terry Lynch was the organizer of the recent bonspiel at the club.

Photo by Brian Choi

Photo by TaeHyeong Kim

Cubans and Canadian disabled people start at the 'Marathon of Hope' (Marathon de la Esperanza) in front of the national capital building in Havana, Cuba. The event is held to commemorate the spirit of Terry Fox, a Canadian athlete who ran across the country in support of cancer research. Some disabled people ran in advance of the race.

Dustin Brown roars out of a turn during the Family Day weekend at Stoco Lake in Tweed. In ice racing, two smaller tires are nestled within a third, so that hundreds of two-inch ice screws can have a solid base to grip ice at speeds often exceeding 100 km/h.

Photo by Frank Moses

(Above) Paul Svoboda stands in front of the Memorial Arena in downtown Belleville. The arena has been closed since 2010 after failures with the ice equipment inside. The city has been criticized for not doing anything with the historic site since it was closed.

Photo by Kyle Visser

(Left) Lindsay Newbery is coach for both the Bay of Quinte Synchro team and the pre-CanSkate and CanSkate events. CanSkate is for those who want to learn or upgrade their skating.

Photo Desirée Decoste

Akim Ruot of the Loyalist Lancers attempts to grab a bounce from St. Lawrence Vikings player Mohamed Omar in game action. The Lancers came out victorious, defeating St. Lawrence 63-48.

Photo by Sam Brown

A Lancer reaches out for the ball in game action. Loyalist defeated their rivals St. Lawrence Vikings in a intense match, 82-77.

Photo by Damon MacLean

(Above) A Fleming Knights player falls during game action. Loyalist Lancers defeated the Fleming Knights 77-61 in men's basketball.

Photo by Damon MacLean

(Left) Loyalist Lancer Rijen Vioria drives the net through St. Lawrence Viking players. The Loyalist Lancers clashed with the St. Lawrence Vikings in Kingston in the closing game of the regular season. Loyalist came out victorious, beating St. Lawrence 63-48.

Photo by Sam Brown

(Below) Samuel Brett, 20, from Quinte West loves to collect hockey sticks. He has played hockey since he could walk and he still has the first hockey stick he was given by her grandmother.

Photo by Deepak Sharma

